

Charles Negus Carroll was a convert to The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and emigrated to Utah in the year 1854 from New Brunswick, Canada. He was president of the South Hampton Branch of the Church. In that capacity, he led a group of 57 converts as far as Fort Leavenworth where they joined a group in preparation for crossing the plains. An epidemic of cholera was raging in camp, and Charles' wife and three youngest children were among the fatalities. His oldest son, Willard, barely escaped.

Their first year in Utah was spent in Farmington and Salt Lake City, then they moved to Provo, recent immigrants from England. Their first two children were born in Provo. When the youngest was three weeks old, they moved to Heber, being among the first few families to do so. They endured the privations and strenuous labor typical of pioneer life. The house they built contained three rooms, a hall, and a summer kitchen. It was their home for 20 years, and in it their next 10 children were born. Father was an expert farmer and soon added a few sheep and cattle to his possessions.

In May 1868, he moved to Orderville, much more enthusiastic about joining the United Order than was his wife. Charles was soon made foreman of one of the farms and elected a member of the governing board. All the older members of the family were put to work, Kezia and Willard teaching school, as they did in Heber. Also as in Heber, Charles was appointed Justice of the Peace and was prominent in civic, social and church activities, working on boards and committees of various kinds, promoting the public welfare. Following in his footsteps, his family have all been prominent and civic leaders, in executive and teaching capacities in Ward and Stake auxiliary organizations.

After the United Order was dissolved, Charles moved to a large farm house a mile from town to be near his several pieces of land. In this home, his wife found a full measure of contentment, happiness and prosperity. She was kind and gentle by nature and an expert homemaker.

Charles and two of his sons were Patriarchs, two served on missions, one was a Bishop, and one a member of the Stake Presidency. Charles lived to be eighty-four years old, and his wife eighty-seven.

WILLARD CARROLL

Willard Carroll was born May 10, 1848, a son of Charles Negus and Lucy Elizabeth

McInelly Carroll, in New Brunswick, Canada, at a small place known as Carroll's Ridge. On the day that Willard turned six, the family started its journey to Utah, May 10, 1854. His mother, brother, Frederick, and sister, Emma, were stricken with cholera at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, where they died and were buried in one grave. His brother George also died on this trip, and Willard and his father were both desperately ill. Salt Lake City was reached in October of 1854 with only the two members of the once complete family.

Willard was enrolled in school where he was given a first reader, which he was able to read upon sight. The father accompanied him to school the next day and discovered that he could also read the second reader. When asked where he had learned to read, he said he didn't know, he just could read.

From Salt Lake City to Provo was the next move, where Willard's father married Kezia Giles on February 4, 1857, when Willard was nine.

He loved school and invariably was at the head of his class.

Willard married Charlotte Moulton March 16, 1869, in the Salt Lake Endowment House. Charlotte was the daughter of Thomas Moulton and Sarah Denton. She was born June 7, 1851, in Irchester, Northamptonshire, England. She traveled with her parents across the plains to Salt Lake City in the Willie Handcart Company when but five years of age and suffered many hardships. In 1860, her family moved to Heber City, where they made their home.

The young couple made their home in Heber City, where Willard accepted the position of village school master. He held this position for the next eight years of his life. He taught school from 1869 to 1878.

The Carrolls moved with their family in 1877 to Orderville, Kane County, Utah, where they took part in a project known as the United Order. Willard's part was again that of school master, along with various duties in the church, and Charlotte was in charge of the sewing and also worked in the kitchen.

In 1887, Willard filled a mission to the Southern States for the LDS Church.

In 1890, the family moved to Old Mexico where Willard took up farming and again taught school. He also became a merchant. While in Mexico, he suffered a stroke which left him only a few days to live. He passed
